I extend New Year’s wishes to all of you. Two thousand twelve was a very good year for Sitnasuak Native Corporation and I expect 2013 to be even better. We are off to a busy start. We are working aggressively to continue our strategy of diversification that we successfully launched in 2012.

We took ownership of Fidelity Title Agency and MatSu Title on December 1, 2012. Both companies were very profitable during their first month of SNC ownership and the transition at both companies has gone very smoothly. We are also diversifying building on our strengths by significantly expanding our Nome tank farm. The project is in full swing and we expect it to be completed by October of this year.

We will continue our work in diversification in 2013 with a goal of another new acquisition or a significant new business start-up company.

Several of the actions that the Board took at the regular quarterly Board meeting on December 7 have been fully implemented.

Specifically:
- The special $500 dividend to elders was issued before Christmas and

BEREAVEMENT BENEFIT

Families of deceased Sitnasuk shareholders will now be eligible for a $1,000 bereavement benefit to defray the costs of funerals and related expenses from the death of a shareholder.

The Board of Directors enacted the bereavement benefit program at its regular board meeting Dec. 7, 2012.

Family members eligible to apply include the surviving spouse, children, lineal descendants, and siblings of the deceased shareholder. The SNC Shareholder Department will work with families and process applications.

“The board decision to implement the bereavement benefit is driven by our mission to benefit shareholders,” Board Chair Jason Evans said.
Grant awarded for HISTORICAL WALKING MAP

The Alaska Humanities Forum has awarded a grant in support of Siqnazumi AĂ¡uituaqtut, The Native History of Nome Walking Map. The historical walking map is a project of the Sitnasuak Native Corporation Elders Committee.

The AHF grant will pay for supplies and printing. SNC and the Sitnasuak Foundation have been supporting the project and will continue to do so through cash and in-kind contributions.

The map will be a folded piece, 11x17 with information about historic points of interest related to Nome’s Alaska Native history. Project Director Joan Kane, SNC’s Planning and Communications Director, said the map will provide a way for diverse audiences – visitors, local youth and lifelong residents – to learn more about Nome’s many-layered past.

“Nome is known worldwide as a gold rush town,” Kane said. “But its historical and living significance as a center of innovations, languages, and indigenous cultures of the circumpolar north has rarely been documented, shared, or discussed. We hope this map will promote greater understanding of Nome’s modern context through its past.”

Siqnazumi AĂ¡uituaqtut (“We’re Walking Around Nome” in Inupiaq) will be widely available at Nome’s airport, restaurants, schools, visitors center, library, Alaska Native corporations, tribal offices, and other cultural centers. It is expected to be completed by June 1.

Elder PROFILE:
ROBERT JOE SR.

Robert Joe Sr. was raised at Pilgrim Springs from the age of 2½ until he was 14 years old. His mother, Imatuq, was married to Seeganna and they had two girls; Seeganna passed away and remarried Robert Joe. Together they had five children, including Robert Joe Sr. in 1927, as well as Joseph, born in 1924, and three girls.

On the 4th of July in 1940, when Robert Joe Sr. was 14 years old, Henry Kost approached him to work at North Pole. For the following four summers, Robert traveled to work there. Later, Robert’s dad worked at the Nome Grill, and Robert began to work there also. Following that, Robert went to work at Marks Field on the Army Base as a dishwasher, then as a laborer; he also worked as a heavy equipment driver and recalls driving big Oshkosh trucks.

When Robert was 25 years old, he was drafted into the US military. He spent two years in Anchorage where he was placed in the ammo department. When he was discharged, he worked for an ammunition inspector, where they made him foreman.

Robert then moved back to Nome and worked for the Alaska Road Commission for three or four years, building roads. He says, “The Cape [Nome] road was real scary because it was one lane. The vehicles going uphill had right-of-way. When the workers got to Fox River, they had to camp out because it was too far to drive back.”

Robert also worked as a table waiter at the Bering Sea where they had a bar and restaurant. He worked for Bronson Water, carrying 2 5-gallon buckets of water. Then Ted Grothe started a water business using a 1-inch hose for pumping water, until he went out of business as the City of Nome began putting in water and sewer.

In 1966, Robert married Ruth Oxereok, who was born and raised in Wales. Two weeks after they married, Billy was born on January 17th. Robert Joe Junior was born January 20, 1967 and John was born prematurely on December 14, 1967. The sons were so close in age that some called them the Three Musketeers. Robert weighed 165 pounds at the time and, carrying his three sons, was all muscle!

Robert was one of the original incorporators of Sitnasuak Native Corporation and we are grateful for his hard work and vision.
For Kendra Nichols-Takak, earning her bachelor’s degree was no walk in the park. She worked full time throughout the seven years of studies, married and had two children, and started a small business. Yet she persevered and last December, Nichols-Takak earned her Bachelor of Arts in Human Services from Alaska Pacific University in Anchorage. Fortunately, she had some help. “If it wasn’t for scholarships I wouldn’t have been able to go to school,” Nichols-Takak said. A Sitnasuak and Bering Straits shareholder, she received scholarships from both corporations, as well as from the Nome Eskimo Community, Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation and Norton Sound Health Corporation.

“People don’t realize how fortunate we are to receive scholarships. I’m really grateful. Most people don’t get that kind of opportunity,” she said.

Born and raised in Nome – daughter of the late Renard and Linda Nichols – Nichols-Takak graduated from Nome-Beltz High School and earned an associates degree in video production at the Art Institute of Seattle. She has used that knowledge to start her own small business, Snowflake Multi-Media. Her “day” job is Injury Prevention Coordinator at Norton Sound Health Corporation.

She returned to school to get her bachelor’s degree in human services because “I’ve always worked with people in social services and I like working with people. I looked at the college catalogue and picked classes that looked interesting to me,” she said.

Nichols-Takak has become a believer in the powers of laughter. Her senior project at APU was the “Laughter Club,” in which she visited the local senior center to lead exercises and activities that promote laughter.

The theory behind it – also called Laughter Therapy or Laughter Yoga – is that laughter has powerful beneficial effects. It exercises the cardio-vascular system, promotes blood flow and releases chemicals in the brain that help people heal and cope. Even fake laughter, Nichols-Takak explains, has these benefits.

“I’ve done Laughter Club in some public venues here in Nome. I try to share it as much as I can. It’s so simple and easy and has so many benefits,” she said. “I’m pretty passionate about it.”

The SNC Shareholder Department encourages shareholders to have a will for their SNC stock. Every shareholder with a will on file will have a chance to win $300. A new winner will be picked every three months. Will forms can be printed off from the website www.snc.org. To request a form by mail, call Dave Evans at the Shareholder Department office in Nome at (907) 387-1226 or Larry Keller at (907) 929-7024. In order to be valid, SNC wills must be notarized or signed by two witnesses.

The vision for SNC’s business operations, drawn by the SNC Board of Directors more than two years ago, is well on the way to becoming reality. The center of that vision, developed in a two-day board retreat at Solomon in 2010, was that SNC would diversify its business activities and become less reliant on 8(a) contracts.

Senior management reports back to the board every year on its progress toward the goals set out in the strategic plan. In December, senior management was able to report dramatic progress: The recent purchase of two Alaska title companies (see article at left) means SNC now has a third major source of operating profits, financial services. The two Alaska title companies and GBS, LLC, now operate under a recently created holding company, SNC Financial Services. The other two major business lines are apparel manufacturing and fuel services.

The board’s decision last year to expand the tank farm will also promote diversification away from 8(a) and open the door to more business opportunities in the area of fuel services.

Senior management also reported progress in other areas that are high board priorities. A shareholder executive development program has been put in place to prepare shareholders for executive positions in the company.

Finally, preliminary financial statements for 2012 indicate that SNC had a very good year with pre-tax profits six times more than 2011. “That’s a dramatic increase, but it’s not a one-time occurrence,” CEO David Hoffman said. “We expect that our operating profits for 2013 will be on par with 2012, because they are built on a sustainable, stable business plan. It’s sustainable because we’re diversified.”

Sitnasuak expands FINANCIAL SERVICES

Sitnasuak has expanded its financial services operations with the recent purchase of two established Alaska companies. The purchase of Fidelity Title in Anchorage and MatSu Title in Wasilla was finalized Dec. 1.

Soon after the purchase was finalized, the SNC Board of Directors created Sitnasuak Financial Services, a wholly owned holding company for the new businesses and GBS, LLC. GBS, is certified ANC 8(a) company and escrow closing agent for Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) in Washington State, Idaho and Kansas.

“This is an important step in our continuing strategy to diversify Sitnasuak’s business lines,” CEO David Hoffman said. “By acquiring two strong financial services companies, we bolster the financial sector and create opportunities for synergies among the three companies.”

Fidelity Title and MatSu Title each has approximately 25 employees and both have been operating for more than 10 years. They are the leading title and escrow service companies in Alaska, according to Desiree Pfeffer, Chief Executive Officer of Sitnasuak Financial Services.

Alvanna-Stimpfle BOUND FOR D.C.

SNC’s Business Development Manager Megan Alvanna-Stimpfle is leaving to become a Legislative Assistant to U.S. Senator Lisa Murkowski in Washington, D.C.

Megan will be a senior advisor on issues related to rural Alaska and Alaska Natives. Her portfolio includes rural infrastructure, all ANCSA issues, 8(a), BIA, and Indian health issues. Senator Murkowski will be in a position of significant influence on these issues in the new Congress by virtue of the Senator’s seats on the Appropriations and Indian Affairs committees.

“We are all sorry to see Megan leave – we’ll miss her talent, productivity, commitment and incredibly positive energy,” CEO David Hoffman said. “I’ve told her that when she gets her fill of D.C., we will welcome her back to SNC.”
Thanks to a partnership of Bering Straits Foundation and Sitnasuak Foundation, and the enthusiastic support of many community organizations, Nome enjoyed its first ever celebration of Native Heritage Month last November.

The celebration, called Kaatiluta: Our Native Community, featured a logo contest, a community walk, potluck, music and dance performances. Kaatiluta means “all of us together” in King Island Inupiaq. About 250 to 300 people participated in the celebration, held Nov. 24.

Kaatiluta was the brainchild of Moriah Sallaffie “Uliggaq,” Executive Vice President of Bering Straits Foundation.

“We chose Kaatiluta because we wanted a word that was meaningful, we wanted the event to represent that although we have a very diverse Native community in Nome and the Bering Strait Region that we are united and should always be united,” she explained.

“We also wanted a word that in the future, when people say it, everyone would know that they were referring to our celebration,” she said.

Sallaffie led a nine-member volunteer planning committee, which began weekly meetings in August. In addition to Sallaffie, the planning committee consisted of Barb Amarok and Bobby Evans (both members of the Sitnasuak Foundation Board of Directors), Darlene Trigg, Kirsten Timbers, Laureli Kineen, Marie Tozier, Niaomi Brunette and Sherri Anderson.

Students in Nome schools were invited to enter the logo design competition and 60 entries were submitted. The winning logo was designed by Nome Beltz High School students Kayla Bourdon, Diane Handeland and Angel Kagasagoon.

Entertainment was provided by Inupiaq Choir, NBHS Cultural Dance Group and the King Island and Diomede Drummers and Dancers. Help and support came from numerous groups and organizations. Norton Sound Seafood Products donated 120 pounds of fish, a troop of Nome Girl Scouts helped to serve food, and kids from the Nome Youth Facility helped set up and clean up. Staff from Kawerak provided rides for elders. Every elder left with a gift.

“It was really a community effort to make it happen,” Sallaffie said. “It was great and we fully look forward to hosting it again next year.”
